II. Rationale

The Local Government Units (LGUs) in Agusan del Norte are facing many challenges due to natural disasters and climate change due to its location. The province often experiences strong typhoons and heavy rainfall, which lead to severe flooding, damaging homes, farms, and public facilities. Coastal areas are also at risk of erosion and storm surges, which can destroy fishponds and livelihoods. Additionally, the province suffers from the effects of El Niño, a weather condition that causes long dry periods, making it difficult for farmers to produce crops and for communities to have enough water. Because of these ongoing challenges, there is a great need for projects that will help protect the environment, secure livelihoods, and strengthen communities against future disasters.

While there have been efforts to help these communities, through the Provincial Development Investment Plan, they still need more support to rebuild their lives and prepare for future calamities. With this, the PLGU of Agusan del Norte engaged with DSWD in the implementation of Risk Resiliency Program – Cash-for-Training and Work (RRP-CFTW) by providing counterpart through Provincial Disaster Risk Reduction and Management Office to address these issues. This program provides temporary jobs to people affected by disasters while also helping improve their communities.

For 2025, the RRP-CFTW program will focus on projects that help communities adapt to climate change and become more prepared for disasters. One of the main activities is climate-resilient livelihood projects, which aim to support farmers and fisherfolk by helping them continue their work despite changing weather conditions. Another important initiative is coastal protection, which involves planting mangroves and other trees along shorelines to prevent erosion and lessen the impact of strong waves. The program will also focus on water resource management, which includes improving water supply systems to help communities cope with droughts. Additionally, infrastructure repair and improvement will be done to strengthen public facilities so they can withstand extreme weather conditions.

Aside from these projects, the program will also include a Cash-for-Training and Cash-for-Work initiative, which combines job opportunities with skill-building activities. Beneficiaries will not only receive wages for their work but will also gain valuable knowledge on sustainable farming, disaster preparedness, and environmental protection. These skills will help them find better livelihood opportunities in the future.

For the year 2025, a total of 1,450 individuals from five municipalities—Buenavista, Jabonga, Santiago, Tubay, and Las Nieves—will benefit from the program. These beneficiaries are mostly from communities that have been severely affected by past disasters. By joining the program, they will receive temporary jobs that will help them earn money for their families while also contributing to projects that will make their communities stronger and more prepared for future calamities.

The expected results of the program are significant. By providing employment and training, it will help families meet their daily needs while also improving their long-term ability to earn a living. The environmental projects, such as mangrove planting and water conservation, will help protect communities from floods and droughts. The infrastructure repairs will make public facilities safer and more durable. More importantly, the knowledge and skills gained by beneficiaries will help them become more resilient, allowing them to adapt to changing weather conditions and secure their future.

In the end, the RRP-CFW program for 2025 is not just about giving temporary jobs—it is about creating lasting solutions to climate challenges. It ensures that communities in Agusan del Norte are better prepared for disasters, have sustainable ways to earn a living, and can recover faster from calamities. Through this initiative, the province moves closer to achieving a safer, stronger, and more resilient future for its people.
